El Niño, El Schmiño

AI Predicts: a Contrarian Outcome is Possible, Even Likely

"The Active Track Caveat"

(SEE SNOWFALL COMPARISONS BELOW)

The local weather prognosticators have been vocal about the "Super El Niño" that's coming this winter season. The general consensus is for less than stellar snowfall and mild temperatures.

BUT WAIT? We asked AI to take a look at historical El Niño winter seasons. AI discovered The Active Track Caveat, and I quote, "The 1997-98 & 1991-92 seasons prove that if the amplified southern storm track, typical of El Niño, shifts just enough, or synchs up with brief sub-freezing arctic air masses, Syracuse can still experience heavy, high-impact winter storms despite an overall milder climate regime".

We followed up and asked... What is expected for THIS winter? AI continued, "Above average precipitation from an active storm track. Milder overall temperatures do not rule out heavy snow; major storms can still drop significant snow if cold air locks in at the right time." BRING IT ON!

NATIONAL SKI PATROL

Song and Labrador Mountains' management sincerely thanks our members of the National Ski Patrol who, day in and day out, are there to help make the sport of skiing and snowboarding safe for everyone involved.

Your members and your organization continue to unselfishly provide the skiing and snowboarding public with expert emergency care, rescue, and education.

Management further encourages those enjoying the slopes and trails of the Song Mountain and Labrador Mountain to lend your support and understanding to our diligent ski patrol.

Don't Forget Your Voluntary Donation to the Patrol
